Triple Diamond Ranch is a 3,983-acre working ranch in Okeechobee County, Florida, an area considered “prime cow country.” Currently used as a cattle ranch, the history of Triple Diamond Ranch, along with its beautiful habitats, improvements, and meticulous care are what define its high quality.

Triple Diamond Ranch is part of a larger property that was originally about 8,000 acres. About half of the original ranch is now under contract for sale closing in early 2018, leaving 3,983 +/- acres of land with improvements for sale.

A two-story 9,069 SF southern plantation style home with a detached 6-car garage is located in the southwest area of the ranch. This estate-quality home provides a private, luxury family retreat.

Triple Diamond Ranch provides various grazing terrain for cattle, including 1,500 acres of improved and semi-improved pasture. The remaining acreage is well managed through a strict burn-and-chop program, which maximizes natural forage and produces a high-quality native grazing range.

Triple Diamond Ranch is as exceptional as it gets, offering opportunities for diverse recreational activities, a luxury family retreat, equestrian and cattle ranch operations.

The ranch's history includes a thoroughbred equestrian operation. Its lineage produced winners of higher caliber stake races, as well as prospects for the Kentucky Derby and the Breeder's Cup. The equestrian infrastructure is still in place.

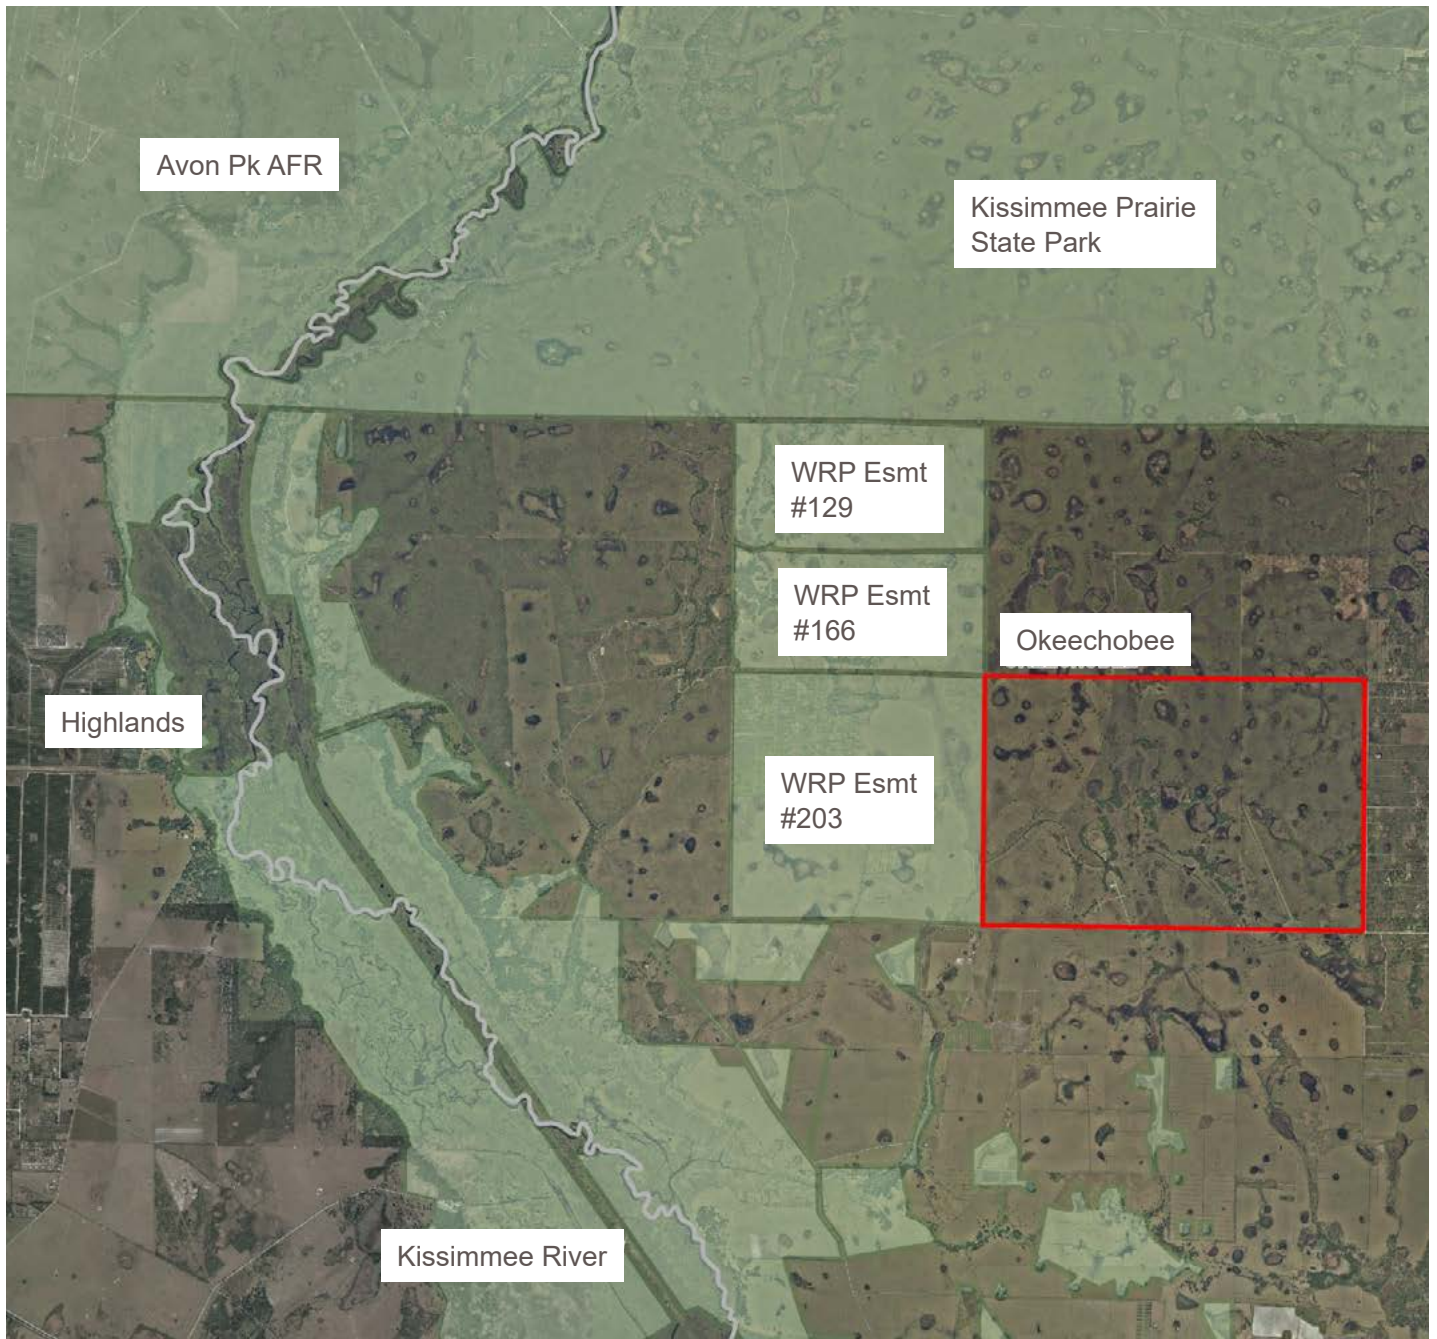

Other facilities include a 20-stall horse stable, two barns, corrals, a manager's home, three houses and a one-mile grass airstrip.

Triple Diamond Ranch is just south of Kissimmee Prairie Preserve State Park and much of the neighboring lands are protected from development.
